New Seasons, New Opportunities

As the leaves begin to change and autumn settles in, we're reminded that every season brings the opportunity for something new. Fall is a time of change, growth, and fresh beginnings—and at Mays Mission for the Handicapped, we see those new beginnings every day.

For many individuals living with disabilities, meaningful employment can seem out of reach. Physical barriers and misconceptions often stand in the way. Yet when opportunities are provided and barriers are removed, people have the chance to thrive.

One of those individuals is Marshall.

Marshall first came to Mays Mission needing an accessible place to call home. After moving into an apartment that better met his mobility needs and receiving modifications to his power wheelchair, another opportunity opened—a chance to join the Mays Mission team.

Today, Marshall is a valued employee whose dedication, positive attitude, and determination inspire everyone around him. His journey reminds us that meaningful work is about more than earning a paycheck. It provides purpose, confidence, friendships, and the opportunity to make a difference.

Marshall's story reflects the vision of our founder, E.W. Mays, who reminded us more than 50 years ago that "It's Ability, Not Disability, that counts!" Those words continue to guide everything we do.

This fall, we're celebrating the many individuals who are embracing new seasons in their lives through opportunity, independence, and meaningful work. Every accessible home, every adaptive modification, and every employment opportunity represents another step toward a brighter future.

Thank you to our donors, volunteers, and supporters for making these life-changing opportunities possible. Because of your generosity, new seasons of hope continue to begin for individuals and families throughout our community.

Together, we're proving every day that when people are given the opportunity to succeed, amazing things can happen. Call us or email us at info@maysmission.org for free brochures you can hand out to businesses in your area and help share the gift of independence in your community.

A Place To Call Home

For many of us, walking through a doorway, reaching a bathroom, or moving from room to room is something we rarely think about. But for individuals living with disabilities, these everyday tasks can become significant obstacles when a home isn't designed with accessibility in mind.

At Mays Mission for the Handicapped, we've had the privilege of helping individuals move from inaccessible living situations into homes and apartments that offer greater safety, comfort, and independence. Something as simple as wider doorways, accessible bathrooms, ramps, or barrier-free layouts can make the difference between struggling each day and living with confidence.

Accessibility isn't just about removing physical barriers—it's about creating opportunities for people to live independently, participate in their communities, and enjoy a better quality of life.
